The SOFIA factor

Born into Hollywood royalty but more than capable of earning her own crown, SOFIA COPPOLA has risen to the challenge of making a film charting celebrity culture gone bad. She tells NATASHA FRASER-CAVASSONI of her love for Paris, Marc Jacobs, chocolate "sashimi" and family.
Photographed by Paul Jasmin.

When Sofia Coppola slips into the Café de Flore, it is easy to understand why the hard-to-please Parisians love the American-born film-maker. Effortlessly chic, she is wearing a white T-shirt, indigo-blue Acne jeans, Céline sandals and carrying the calf leather SC bag that she designed for Louis Vuitton in 2008. Sporting no make-up and boasting thick chestnut hair that falls above her shoulders, the slight, long-limbed Coppola sums up coltish. That is until the style icon starts talking about her latest film The Bling Ring. "Based on a true story, it's totally different to anything else I've done," the 42-year-old says. "But then, I like a challenge."

Featuring Emma Watson, The Bling Ring concerns a gang of privileged Hollywood teenagers who break into the homes of celebrities such as Lindsay Lohan and swipe their Chanel and other high-fashion items. "The business of stealing labels becomes their equivalent of eating candy but all the time," Coppola says. "Way out of balance, it quickly turns bad." Her voice is gentle but she is succinct and particular about her choice of words. "Throughout the film, I was trying hard not to be judgemental because I wanted the audience to react and make their own decision," she says. On the other hand, with regard to the gang's obsession with celebrity and luxury labels, Coppola opines: "I do think it is a big part of our culture and the reality is not being addressed."
